OF CONSTITUTION Begins Preparation of Note of Communication.

BERLIN, December 4.—The government has begun the preparation of a note of protest against the communication of Premier Lloyd George of Great Britain, sent in behalf of the allies, in which it was proposed to revise the treaty provision for holding the upper Silesian plebiscite.

It is officially said the German reply will unequivocally decline to consent to any change in the plan for holding the plebiscite on the ground that it would be a violation of the treaty, and a concession which would favor the Poles during the elections. The note, it is declared, will agree with the unanimous opinion of the Germanimous opinion of the Germanimous opinion of the communication. "What these opponents of the seventh day call the American Sab-bath," the statement reads, "is nothing more than a subterfuge.
"There is no American Sabbath, as well as there is no English, Ger-man or Dutch Sabbath. There is no reason in existence which pernote, it is declared, will agree with the unanimous opinion of the Ger-man press that Germany's interests demand emphatic refusal of any new plan, and will contain a detailed statement of the reasons for adher-ence to the original plan. It is expect-ed the note will be completed in sevmits any body of legislators to de-cide in this theological question that one party is totally right and the one party is totally right and the other wrong.
"Even at the present time the existing laws on statute books of the state of New York are the grossest injustice to a large portion of the citizenry of this country, and the alliance will make every effort to amend same to allow the seventh day observing. American, citizen, equal

Notes of Art and Artists

The first exhibition of illustrative work by artists in the United States Department of Agriculture, which opened at the Corcoran Gallery of Art last Wednesday, is distinctly unique. It, furthermore, introduces to Washington an entire new coterie of artists, men and women who show themselves to be expert craftsmen, commanding their medium and capable of what might almost be termed technical perfection. The scope of the work also will be a surprise to technical perfection. The scope of the work also will be a surprise to many. It includes drawings and paints of bugs, insects, worms, flowers, fruit, grain, etc.

The bureau of plant industry, office of horticultural and pomological investigations, is represented by paintings made from the original fruits in man is now to be seen in the atrium of the Corcoran Gallery of Art.

Mr. Heintzelman was born in Newark, N. J., in November, 1892. He was only nine years old when he entered the Art School at Providence, R. I., where he studied for eight years, winning various prizes and finally the alumni traveling scholarship, which gave him the opportunity of study abroad. He returned to the United States in 1910 and for the next four years was head of the fine arts department of the Detroit School of Design. This position he relinquished to accept the position of instructor in the fine arts department of the Rhode Island School of Design.

It was not until then that he began etching, his attention having been engaged by an article in a newspaper on etching by George T. Plowman, a well known etcher, which lead to certain experiments and almost immediate success.

well known etcher, which lead to tain experiments and almost immediate success.

"The Rabbi," a portrait study, was the first plate he etched, and brought him at once into prominence. His first exhibition was held in Boston in the fall of 1917 and attracted widespread and favorable attention. This comprised twenty-seven plates, mostly figures and heads. At that time and ever since his work has been reminiscent of the great master of etching, Rembrandt, but it is quite become for interpretation most often old men and women, such as Rembrandt would have liked to have etched or painted, and he has rendered these subjects with a skill and sincerity which would have delighted the great master. Like Rembrandt, he has made old age beautiful and truly venerable.

There are several of these portraits of sneadid old neonle in the present truly venerable.

There are several of these portraits of splendid old people in the present exhibition in the Corcoran Gallery of Art. Among these is an impression of his, "Threescore and Ten," which has received prizes in no less than four exhibitions. Here, too, is his portrait of "The Old Man with a Violin" and other now famous plates.

Curiously enough, Mr. Heintzelman has etched with equal skill, though piece of work and most skillful manifestation of art.

Some of these etchings are out of print; many, however, are still obtainable and none is high priced. It is a delightful exhibition.

of horticultural and pomological investigations, is represented by paintings made from the original fruits in connection with the investigations in systematic pomology, which are used as an aid in identification of varieties and record for new introductions of fruit. The artists are R. C. Steadman, Mary D. Arnold and Amanda A. Newton. The work is extraordinarily fine in color and accurate in rendering, grapes, apples, pears, plums and berries of a most perfect description being shown, all very realistically copied.

The offices of fruit disease investigation and economic botany, forest pathology, plant physiology, etc., exhibit groups of paintings covering a wide range of scientific investigation along botanical lines made by J. Marion Shull for the purpose of a mercord and education.

From the office of economic and systematic botany come drawings of American grasses by Mary W. Gill and Agnes Chase used as illustrations in the botanical bulletins.

Illustrations drawn to show the habits of different grasses, by Mrs. Ellen I. Schutt Wallis, are exhibited by the branch in charge of forage crop investigations.

Mrs. A. E. Hoyle shows charming drawings made in connection with the investigation for the perpetuation and improvement of the sheep drawings made in connection with the investigation for the perpetuation and improvement of the sheep and cattle grazing areas in the national forests.

The most realistic drawings are shown of insects that are injurious the art into disrepute, whereas at its best there is nothing finer.

Miss E. T. Armstrong, H. B. Bradford, Miss E. Edmonson, Miss E. Hart, Miss Alme Motter, Mrs. S. Swegman, R. E. Snodgrass, Miss C. Stuard and W. R. Walton. One of these drawings is a frightfully realistic presentation of caterpillars.

E. R. Kalmbach of the biological survey shows drawings of birds. But this branch of artistic work in the service is not as largely represented as might be desired.

Scientific illustrative work of this kind has been carried on in the scientific departments of the government for a good many years and has perhaps not received the appreciation or the attention it deserves. It is craftsmanship of a very high order.

There is a work, however, of an artistic, illustrative sort included in this exhibition which is quite new. This has to do with interior decoration and landscape architecture. The purpose is to improve in appearance the outdoors and indoors of farm-life. It is an excellent plan and a step in the right direction.

The drawings suggesting the development of outdoor setting for farm-houses are by B. Z. Morrison and Miss E. M. Whitehorn and are also not of a strictly professional character. The interiors are by Miss M. B. Sawrie.

Such an exhibition as this gives opportunity for comparison and criticism which should be helpful, and not only instructs the public but calls the attention of the people to the work which is being done in this field under government auspices. As a first showing it is highly to be commended.
